

Lynne O'Shea Nellemann

Dr. Nellemann is a management consultant, working in enterprise transformation and corporate governance for global firms. She is also one of 80 Fellows in the International Leadership Forum, a non-partisan think tank on public policy affairs. Lynne started her career in brand management at Procter & Gamble, handling the Ivory Liquid brand. Following a decade in client services with the IPG and OMNICOM group of advertising agencies, she became a corporate officer (and the first female officer in the Fortune 50) for International Harvester. She then joined Gannett Media as vice president (publishers of USA TODAY). Her most recent consulting includes managing director / senior vice president positions at Arthur Andersen (now Accenture); Innova Group and A.T. Kearney. She was also executive vice president for the Museum of Broadcast Communications.

Active in both corporate and nonprofit board work, Lynne's experience includes non-executive director for a NYSE-listed compensation firm; non-executive director for a LLC discount securities firm; strategic director for a NYSE-listed advertising agency; executive director and officer for a LLC snack food distribution firm; Chairman's liaison for a NYSE-listed manufacturing firm with the International Advisory Council. An early member of The Chicago Network, Dr. Nellemann helped found both the Michigan and New Jersey Women's Forums, and serves as president of the Illinois Women's Forum. She is also on the board of directors for the International Women's Leadership Foundation.

Prior academic oversight work includes advisory boards for the Universities of Missouri; Illinois; DePaul and Roosevelt — all with graduate schools of business; and trustee for Saint Mary's University of Minnesota. Importantly, Lynne was appointed by Congress as a Federal Glass Ceiling Commissioner, and then selected by the Commission as its Republican Co-Chair — on direct report to two U.S. secretaries of labor — in both Clinton and Bush administrations. Awards or listings include:

"The watershed generation of woman executives rising to the top" (WSJ) "Advertising woman of the year" (Adweek)

"One of the top 100 people of 2003 in technology and regional economic development" (I-Street Magazine)

"Pacesetters in Chicago," "One of the Chicago's top fund-raisers" and "A marketing whiz kid" (Crain's Business)

"One of 200 outstanding academics of the 21st Century" (International Biography Center)

"Who's Who in the World; in American Women; Among Intellectuals; in Finance and Industry; in the Midwest" (and) in Colleges and Universities.

She has held faculty positions in the Kellogg Graduate School of Management; The S.I. Newhouse School of Public Communications at Syracuse University; The Graduate School of Business for The University of Chicago; and The Kellstadt Graduate School at DePaul University.

Lynne Nellemann has two sons Leif (25), an investment banker and Erik (22), a college senior; and is married to David Nellemann, an Accenture partner and former head of global industries. Together they have traveled on business or pleasure to more than 100 countries.